Yesterday morning when the jailer went into the county jail to look after Kingman. the prisoners confined therein he found that all the birds but one had flown. There were four men in the jail when locking up time came the night before, but only one was on hand to respond to roll call the following morning. Two of the men were in for burglary and the other on a misdemeanor charge. It is believed that one of the burglars giving the name of R. J. Keayting did the job and the others took advantage of the opening to make their escape. The big staple on the door of the corridor had been ed a slight pressure to break, and the night the staple was broken off tion. and the men had only to saw a hole through the wooden wall of the building to get out. Indians tracked one of to a point on the railroad east of town, where he was joined by the others. It is supposed that the men there boarded a train and were miles away before morning

Every effort is being made by the sheriff's office to apprehend the fugitives. Keayting was held for burglary, committed some time ago in Kingman. He was apparantely an old offender. Porfirio Olivas committed

Last night a message was received by the coroner from Franconia conveying the intelligence of the death of a Mr. Rivard by the accidental discharge of his gun. Mr. Rivard was at the time of his death at the head of a company of Los Angeles men that had in view the putting in of a large milling plant to handle the gold bearing concreted gravel beds of the eastern slope of the Chemehuevis mountains, twelve miles south of Franconia. The company was receiving material for the plant, several carloads of which is on the road. Just how the accident which resulted in the death of Rivard occurred could not be learned. The body will be brought to Franconia and after the inquest will probably be shipped to Los Angeles.

Mr. Rivard was one of the first engineers on the Santa Fe railroad and was the first sheriff of Coconino county, Arizona. He was a bright, hustling man and had many warm friends along the line of the Santa Fe and among the railroad men of the other roads.
